Recording New Opportunities

By LOUIS MAYFIELD August 2nd 2016

JAMMIN: Stormfront Productions members Mark Tempary and Alison Hams (left), with Acting Council CEO Migelle Hiscock and Acting Mayor Tom Antonio.

Local music talent will now have an opportunity to further their professional careers thanks to a new joint initiative by Stormfront Productions and the Whyalla City Council.

The inaugural Whyalla Recording Scholarship was launched on Monday, which allows young singers, songwriters and musicians to audition for the chance to record in a local professional recording studio.

Stormfront Productions' Alison Hams said the initiative was aimed at "developing a true Original Artist and getting them and their music out to the greater world".

Acting Council Chief Executive Officer Migelle Hiscock said the council were "very keen" to be supportive of the scholarship, which had been identified as a positive initiative by the Whyalla Youth Council.

Whyalla residents aged 12 to 19 can audition for a panel of judges who will award the Scholarship to a Winner, and offer constructive advice to all other Entrants.

"The Winner has six months to record their song, then the next six months will be a mentorship of music management for them and their Single" Ms Hams said.
